National report

Prospects for weak growth

Regional Network contacts expect an increase in overall activity in 2023 Q3. In the period to winter, contacts expect growth to slow. Reduced construction activity and weaker household demand are dampening activity growth, while investment related to energy production, and commercial services continues to rise. A number of contacts also point out that the krone depreciation over the past year has helped improve Norwegian firms' competitiveness. The number of contacts reporting capacity constraints continues to fall, while the supply of labour is little changed since the previous survey. Contacts expect annual wage growth of 5.4% in 2023 and 4.6% in 2024. At the same time, contacts report reduced profitability in Q3 compared with the same time in 2022.

Wide differences across sectors

In this survey, contacts report somewhat higher activity in Q3 (Chart 1), in line with expectations in May. As in previous surveys, the increase reflects a sharp rise in oil services and solid growth in services (Chart 2). At the same time, the decline in construction activity is accelerating and sales volumes in retail trade are falling. Contacts expect overall activity growth to slow in Q4. Oil services contacts expect the strongest growth, but services contacts also expect a continued rise in activity. Manufacturing, construction and retail trade contacts expect activity to decline in Q4.

Construction activity continues to fall

The decline in construction activity has been gathering pace in the second half of 2023. Residential construction is falling the most, but commercial building construction is also declining. A number of contacts cite reduced household demand for rehabilitation, conversion and extension projects. Contacts report solid growth related to infrastructure and transportation, but it is taking longer for a number of the public projects to commence owing to high construction costs. The krone depreciation has improved competitiveness and increased the number of contracts awarded to Norwegian contractors. Some contacts expect reconstruction following damage caused by Storm Hans to cushion the decline in construction in affected parts of Norway.

Increasing energy sector demand

Manufacturing contacts as a whole expect minor changes in activity between 2023 Q2 and Q3. Growth expectations for Q3 have been revised down since the previous survey, and contacts expect activity to decline somewhat in Q4. Prospects are being dampened in particular by lower demand for building materials and consumer durables. At the same time, contacts supplying the energy sector are still experiencing solid demand. A weaker krone exchange rate is strengthening the competitiveness of Norwegian manufacturing. The war in Ukraine is boosting orders for contacts producing defence materiel. Production in fish farming is slightly higher than normal in many parts of Norway owing to favourable ocean temperatures.

Activity growth in oil services is picking up. Energy prices are high, and willingness to invest in oil and gas extraction is substantial. Much of the growth in the domestic market can be attributed to the petroleum tax package. Contacts expect activity to increase further in Q4, but the rise will be dampened somewhat by weaker developments in rig and drilling activity on the Norwegian shelf.

Cost-conscious households

Household demand for services continues to rise, but contacts expect slower growth ahead. The krone depreciation has contributed to a higher number of holidaymakers in Norway this summer. At the same time, some contacts point out that households are increasingly choosing cheaper alternatives for overnight stays and are cutting out unnecessary services. On the other hand, retail trade enterprises have reported reduced sales volumes since the beginning of 2022, and they also expect a decline in sales volumes in this survey. Since the pandemic, many contacts have had large inventories and have increased promotional activity to reduce them. Over a period, customers have shifted to cheaper alternatives in several retail trade segments. In Q3, the decline has also been amplified by Storm Hans's contribution to flood-related shop closures and damage to inventories in some parts of Norway. Contacts expect tighter household finances to lead to a further fall in sales volumes in Q4.

Contacts purchase more services

Activity among commercial services is increasing from Q2. Contacts report sharp growth in services turnover in the energy sector. An increased focus on sustainability and energy transition is also pushing up demand for consultancy services. Activity growth is also solid in legal and strategic consulting and information technology. In the business sector, spending on employee activities is rising, and hotels and restaurants report increased occupancy. The introduction of new rules for the use of contract personnel from 1 July has substantially reduced activity for some staffing agencies. Architects and others who work on construction projects have also reduced activity in Q3. In the period ahead, service contacts as a whole expect activity growth to continue.

Decline in investment ahead

Overall, contacts expect investment volume to be little changed between 2022 and 2023. At the same time, contacts expect investment to fall in 2024. Expectations are weaker than in the previous survey and primarily reflect services contacts' current plans to invest less in 2024, whereas in the previous survey they expected weak growth. High inflation is making investment more expensive, and a number of contacts point to higher interest rates and uncertainty surrounding economic developments ahead. Commercial real estate investment in particular is being postponed, while investment in digitalisation continues to pick up. Manufacturing is the only sector with plans for increased investment in 2024. In manufacturing, major investments are being made related to both energy transition and carbon footprint reduction, and these investments appear to be less affected by higher prices and interest rates.

Rising employment

Contacts expect overall employment to increase through the second half of 2023. Employment is being pushed up by a sharp increase in staffing in oil services and by increased employment among services contacts. In construction and retail trade, a decrease in orders is leading to a lower need for staffing ahead. However, contacts are planning for a smaller decline in staffing than suggested by the decline in output. A number of contacts fear that substantial reductions in staffing will lead to a shortage of qualified labour when demand increases again in the future. Thus, they choose to have more spare capacity and lower margins for a period. Overall, the share of contacts with full capacity utilisation is falling, with construction contributing most to the decline (Charts 3 and 4). Also among manufacturing and retail trade contacts, fewer are reporting capacity constraints. Among oil services contacts, the share is broadly unchanged, while it has increased slightly among services contacts. The overall indicator for capacity utilisation is still above its historical average. Overall, labour supply is little changed since the previous survey but varies a little across sectors. Among construction contacts, far fewer report labour constraints, and the share has also fallen slightly in retail trade. In the other sectors, the number of contacts reporting recruitment difficulties is somewhat higher than in the previous survey. These are largely enterprises that are facing difficulty recruiting engineers and IT employees, in addition a number of enterprises are facing shortages in occupational categories such as chefs, drivers, mechanics and electricians. Some contacts report that the weak krone makes it more difficult to recruit foreign labour.

Chart 3 Capacity utilisation¹ and labour supply constraints²

1 Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

Chart 4 Capacity utilisation¹

Percentage shares

¹ Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

High wage growth

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 5.4% in 2023 (Chart 5), unchanged from the estimate in the previous survey. As in the previous survey, a majority of contacts point to the central wage settlement in spring. Many contacts have had to increase wages slightly more owing to the pick-up in inflation since the wage settlement. Moreover, some contacts point out that the labour market is still tight for several occupational groups. Contacts have revised up their wage growth estimates for 2024 to 4.6%. Oil services contacts report the highest estimate, at 5.1%, while construction and retail trade report the lowest, at 4.4%. The upward revision reflects high inflation. On the other hand, some contacts expect weaker economic growth and reduced profitability to curb wage growth.

Reduced profitability

Profitability among contacts is slightly weaker than a year ago (Chart 6). The decline is being driven primarily by the rise in costs. Many contacts point to higher purchase prices and higher labour costs. On the other hand, a number of contacts point to lower electricity expenses. As in previous surveys, construction and retail trade contacts report the steepest fall in profitability. In these sectors, lower activity levels than in 2022 are weakening profitability. In manufacturing, contacts overall report somewhat weaker profitability, but there is considerable variation among contacts. A weaker krone exchange rate is improving margins in the export industry, but a number of contacts also point to lower selling prices in local currency. At the same time, profitability is being dampened by a fall in volume in many segments of the building materials industry. In oil services, margins have continued to improve, while they are little changed in services.

Most favourable economic situation in region South-West

Beginning with the first survey of 2023, contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. As in previous surveys, differences across regions are relatively minor. Contacts in region South-West have the highest positive average, at 0.9, an increase from 0.6 in the previous survey. Also in regions North and South, contacts are more positive than in the rest of the country, with an average of 0.6 and 0.4, respectively. As in the two previous surveys, the most pessimistic contacts are in the regions Inland and East, with an average of -0.4 and -0.2, respectively.
