National report

Continued growth, but wide differences

Overall, the enterprises in Norges Bank's Regional Network expect activity to increase somewhat in the latter half of 2024. Activity growth expectations for Q3 have been revised down slightly from the previous survey. Prospects have weakened in construction, manufacturing and retail trade, while oil services contacts have revised up their activity growth expectations. In services, expectations are little changed from the previous survey. Capacity utilisation is slightly higher than in the previous survey and slightly more enterprises report labour shortages. Regional Network contacts are planning to invest less in 2024 than in 2023 but expect to increase investment in 2025. Contacts' wage growth estimates for 2024 and 2025 are unchanged from the previous survey at 5.2% and 4.3%, respectively.

Contacts expect continued growth

Overall, contacts expect activity to increase somewhat through the latter half of 2024 (Chart 1). Activity growth expectations in 2024 Q3 have been revised down slightly from the previous survey, and differences across industries have widened (Chart 2). Construction and retail trade contacts expect a decline in activity, and prospects are weaker than before summer. Contacts in the other industries expect activity to increase, and oil services have revised up activity growth expectations for Q3.

Increased pessimism in construction

Construction contacts expect a substantial decline in activity through autumn. The sharpest decline is in building construction. High wage growth, increased material costs and high interest expenses result in weak profitability for many residential and private commercial building construction projects. This is prolonging many decision-making processes and causing a large share of projects to be postponed or cancelled. Some contacts also report a decrease in public sector orders and single out the postponement or cancellation of local government projects. However, energy-efficiency standards for buildings and increased investment in the petroleum sector, the aquaculture sector and the defence sector are boosting activity among some contacts. Construction contractors overall report fairly stable activity. On the whole, infrastructure projects are underpinning activity, while there is a substantial decline in foundation work related to construction projects.

Weaker krone boosts tourism

Services contacts report a rise in demand from both businesses and households. More extensive reporting requirements for businesses and a need for new digital solutions are pushing up demand for consultancy services. Reporting requirements relate in particular to climate, while digitalisation largely focuses on cloud solutions and automation. Some contacts report that the high cost of labour and difficulties in recruiting staff is boosting demand for automated solutions. Contacts report fairly stable demand for advertising services, while the decline in construction is leading to lower activity for architects and recruitment agencies. In addition, real estate companies report a rise in vacant properties, particularly retail properties. At the same time, contacts report a rise in commercial real estate operations, such as work canteens, security and cleaning services. A number of contacts expect that wage growth has boosted household demand. Moreover, a weak krone results in solid growth for travel industry contacts, and they report an increase in the number of both foreign and domestic guests.

Retail trade contacts expect a slight decline in sales volumes in 2024 Q3 and thereafter fairly stable volumes towards the end of the year. Contacts that sell furniture, building materials and cars report the most pronounced decline. Many contacts have increased promotional activity this summer, and a number of contacts expect that this has helped dampen the decline in sales volumes. New rules on car leasing entered into force on 1 July 2024. Some car dealerships therefore report that customers brought forward car purchases and that this lifted sales volumes in Q2, at the expense of Q3. Consumer goods sales have been more robust than capital goods sales, and customers are shifting towards cheaper alternatives, resulting in an upswing for discount stores. Newly established households have changed their buying patterns the most and some upmarket retail trade contacts continue to face increased demand from mature customer segments.

Increased oil industry demand

Activity is high in oil services. Prospects have improved since the previous survey, and contacts expect growth to remain elevated through autumn. Growth is most pronounced in the domestic market, where the petroleum tax package is continuing to boost activity. Furthermore, improved oil and gas extraction is leading to growth in services such as transport, temporary staffing, and production drilling. Substantial willingness to invest in oil and gas globally is also pushing up export market activity. However, high-capacity utilisation and labour shortages are dampening activity growth among a large share of oil services.

Activity growth is strongest in export markets among manufacturing contacts, and a number report that a weaker krone is helping them enter new markets. Growth for some contacts is also due to rising demand from the defence sector, the development of data centres and investment growth in maritime industries. Quotas and disease outbreaks are still limiting production in the aquaculture industry. Renewable energy development is boosting growth for some contacts, but a number of contacts pointed out that profitability is weak and that there is considerable uncertainty surrounding many of these projects. Building materials manufacturers report a decline in output, despite many already having reduced output substantially. Contacts that supply the European manufacturing sector, such as producers of steel and cars, expect demand to slow further in the latter half of 2024.

Investment growth in 2025

Many contacts are holding back investment owing to high investment and financing costs, and a number of contacts have postponed planned projects. A large number of contacts report only investing in essential maintenance. As in spring, manufacturing contacts and oil services are planning for increased investment, while retail trade and services contacts expect investment to fall. Contacts are investing in particular in climate change mitigation measures and digitalisation. At the same time, contacts are planning to invest in ships that can be used in both the oil industry and in the development of renewable energy. The aquaculture industry has resumed investment postponed in 2023, which helps boost investment in 2024, and even more in 2025. Contacts are planning to invest less in 2024 compared with 2023. This is a downward adjustment since the previous survey, when contacts indicated a slight increase. Investment is expected to increase in 2025.

Higher capacity utilisation

The share of contacts reporting full capacity utilisation has increased somewhat since the previous survey (Charts 3 and 4). Slightly more contacts than in the previous survey report recruitment difficulties, and the indicator for labour shortages is now close to its historical average. There is a particular shortage of engineers, skilled workers and chefs. Many contacts report that it is difficult to recruit foreign labour owing to hiring regulations and a weaker krone exchange rate. In this survey, contacts were also asked how much of their workforce they could reduce while maintaining current output levels. On average, contacts reported that they could reduce staffing by close to 5%, and most contacts reported that this share is at a normal level. At the same time, somewhat more contacts reported that this is higher than normal than those that reported the opposite. The share was particularly high among construction and retail trade contacts. Most of these contacts reported that they have spare capacity because activity is currently low but that they expect this to reverse ahead.

Percentage shares

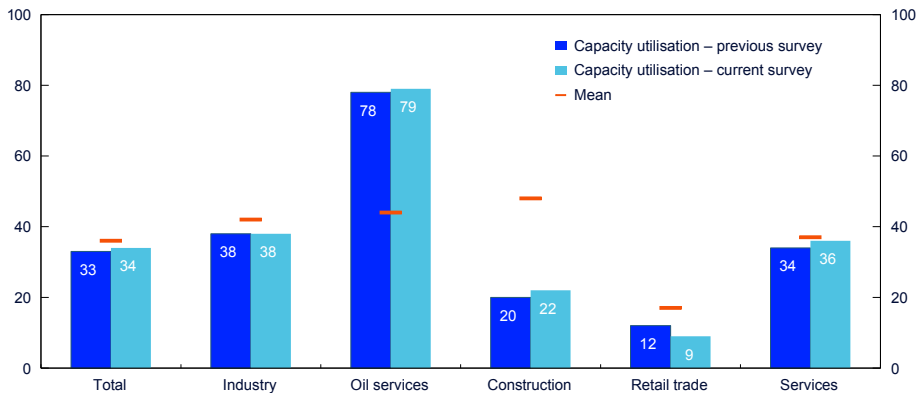

1 Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

Chart 4 Capacity utilisation¹

Percentage shares

¹ Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

Growth in the various industries may not add to aggregate growth due to rounding.

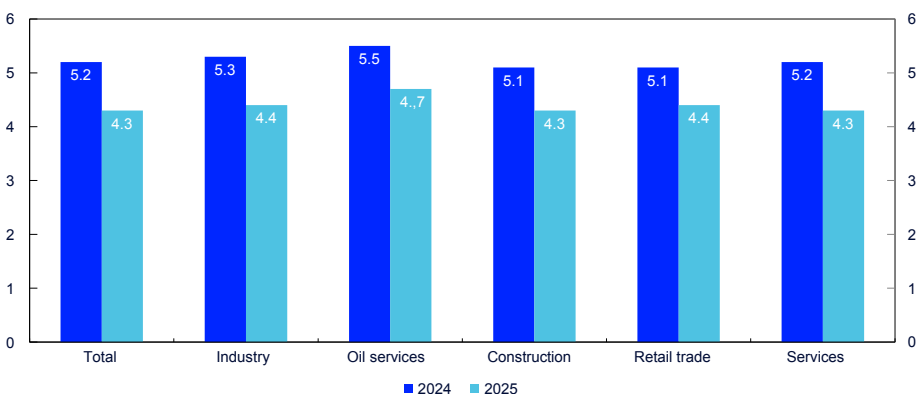

Contacts are planning for an increase in employment in 2024 Q3 and Q4. As in the previous survey, contacts in oil services and services are planning for the strongest growth. Contacts cite higher order levels as the main reason for the increase in staffing. Contacts in IT and tourism are planning to increase their workforces the most.

Unchanged annual wage growth estimates

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 5.2%, as in the previous survey (Chart 5). The wage growth estimate for 2025 is also unchanged at 4.3% in this survey. Oil services have the highest wage growth estimate for 2025, while contacts in construction and services have the lowest. Strong competition for key skills within some occupational groups is boosting wage growth. Contacts also expect the price developments to be important for wage growth in 2025.

Chart 5 Annual wage growth

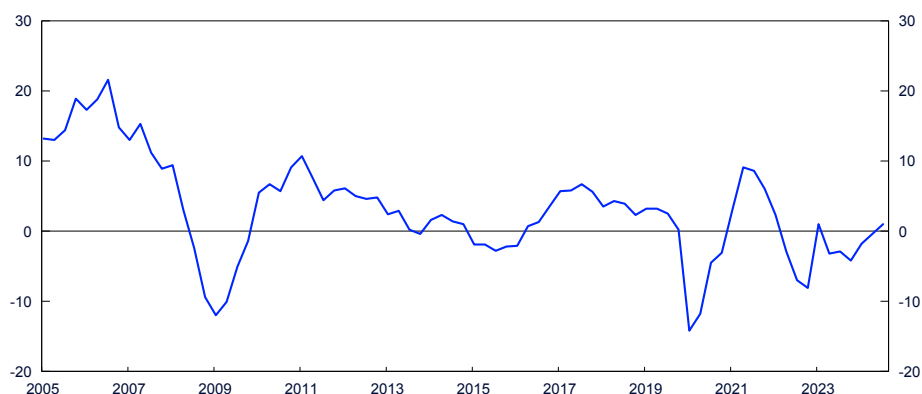

Expected annual wage growth. Percent

Chart 6 Overall profitability growth

Change in operating margin in the current quarter compared with the same period one year earlier. Percent

Improved profitability

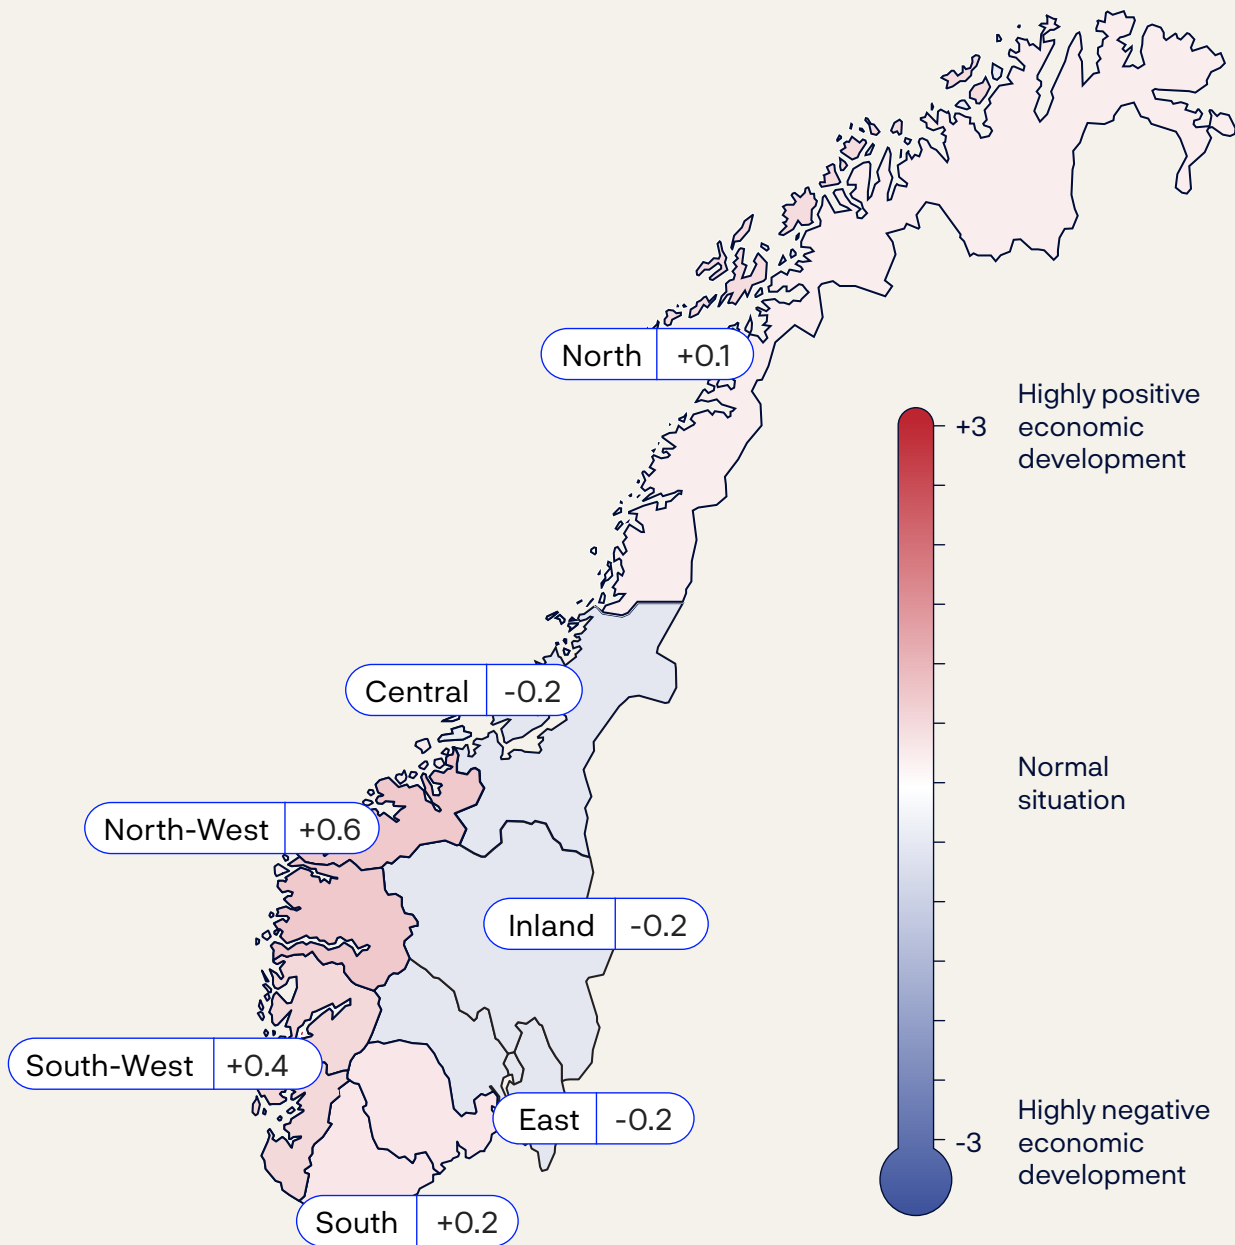

Overall, profitability among contacts has improved a little since a year ago, which is the first time since the beginning of 2023 (Chart 6). Oil services contacts report a considerable improvement in margins, reflecting high demand. Profitability among contacts in services and manufacturing has also improved. Lower activity and increased wage and material costs result in a sharp deterioration in profitability in construction. For several retail trade contacts, increased transport costs worsen profitability.

The economic situation is still most robust in western Norway

Contacts are asked, on a scale between -3 and +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. As in the previous survey, the regional indicator is highest in the western regions, while it is lowest in the regions Central, Inland and East. In western and southern regions, high activity in the energy sector is having a strong impact on the economy. The regional indicators in the coastal regions have been pushed up by deliveries to maritime industries and increased tourism. Weak developments in construction are pushing down the regional indicators in many parts of Norway, but most of all in the regions Central, Inland and East.
